Subject: Hailey Sidewalk Issues For Your Review
Attachments: Hailey Sidewalks[1].pdf

To the Hailey City Council (and please provide a copy to Mayor Davis since I cannot find an email address for him):

Since the proposed Complete Streets proposal is stalled and may well be going nowhere. I am writing to ask the assistance of the City Council in improving the current way that sidewalks in Hailey are designed and approved by the City.

Right now there is no public process that enables citizen input on the construction of sidewalks in Hailey yet sidewalks continue to be built every year in a remarkably haphazard way. In addition there are no specific Hailey City requirements for sidewalk construction with the exception of commercial projects that are reviewed under Design Review standards. And even recent commercial projects are inconsistent in regard to the inclusion of landscaping. A good example is the brand new 2010 sidewalk (no tree grates) at the old Eye Center Building location on the south side of Croy Street between Main and 1st Avenue as compared with the sidewalk in front of the Red Door Design House on west Bullion Street (which has tree grates) between Main and River Street.

I have attached a pdf file of a series of photos I took last fall of a number of sidewalk projects in the Hailey Townsite to show the great variation in curbs, landscaping, tree or other landscaping plantings (in tree grates or in a landscaping strip) and locations within the one hundred foot right-of-way of the Hailey Townsite. Each photo is labeled with its location in town and the direction the viewer is facing.

The photos do not include the most recent sidewalk construction on south 3rd Avenue at the Armory, the Senior Center and the Alternative High School. Those new installations do not provide for any landscaping whatsoever and are completely out of line with the Hailey Elementary School sidewalks located a block to the north on 3rd Avenue, a sidewalk that, as you know, annexed a huge part of the City right-of-way with no public involvement.

In all of these sidewalk projects the only consistency is no consistency, and because there is no process for public involvement or any public notification whatsoever, interested citizens may not even know that sidewalk construction is taking place until the concrete is poured.

Since there is a 100% probability that new sidewalks will be built in 2011 and in future years in the Hailey Townsite and other locations in town, I would ask the City Council to direct that a public process with notification and public hearings be initiated for all sidewalk projects regardless of their location, and, further, I would ask that the City Council direct that a City Standard be established for all new sidewalk construction that includes a landscaping component suitable to the location (i.e. tree grates with roughed in irrigation in commercial locations and planting strips in other locations).

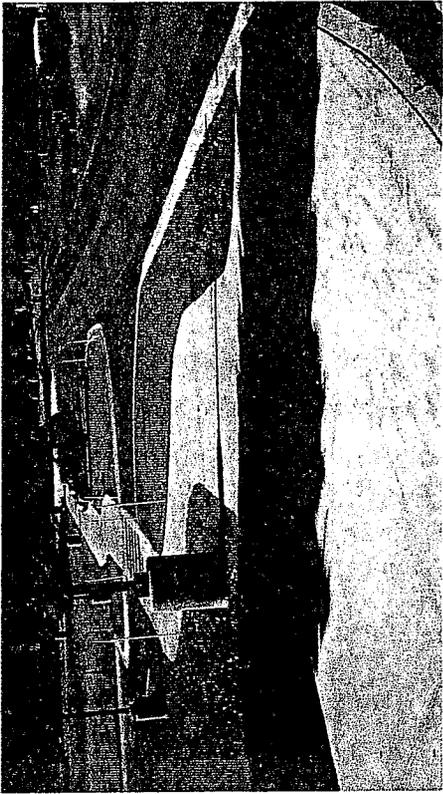

Thanks for your consideration. I look forward to hearing back from you.

Sincerely,

Jon Marvel

Dear Dr. Reid:

By this letter, the City of Hailey and the Hailey Historic Preservation Commission agrees with the Idaho SHPO to expedite the notification process regarding the National Register of Historic Places nomination for the Fox-Warwick House. This action is agreed to because the Historic Commission generated the nomination and has therefore already reviewed and submitted the nomination to the SHPO, indicating our approval of the nomination.

The National Register of Historic Places

The National Register of Historic Places is the Nation's official list of cultural resources worthy of preservation. Authorized under the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966, the National Register is part of a national program to coordinate and support public and private efforts to identify, evaluate, and protect our historic and archeological resources. Properties listed in the Register include districts, sites, buildings, structures, and objects that are significant in American history, architecture, archeology, engineering, and culture. The National Register is administered by the National Park Service, which is part of the U.S. Department of the Interior.

Criteria for Evaluation

The quality of significance in American history, architecture, archeology, engineering, and culture is present in districts, sites, buildings, structures, and objects that possess integrity of location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association, and:

- A. That are associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history; or
- B. That are associated with the lives of persons significant in our past; or
- C. That embody the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction, or that represent the work of a master, or that possess high artistic values, or that represent a significant and distinguishable entity whose components may lack individual distinction; or
- D. That have yielded or may be likely to yield, information important in prehistory or history.

Fox-Worswick House

Summary Description:

The Fox-Worswick house is located on slightly sloping ground at the northwest corner of North Second Avenue and East Bullion Street. It is on a large lot landscaped with trees and shrubs, with no fence enclosing the property. A single-car garage is the only other structure on the property; it is located north of the house. The dwelling is a two-story building based on the gable-front and wing plan, with modest Queen Anne-influenced ornamentation. The additions and second story of the gable-front section were built around an original one-story, cottonwood log cabin core. The building has a massed compound plan, with a T-shaped wing centered on its west elevation, a one-story, shed-roofed addition on its northwest corner, and a matching two-story addition to the north elevation of the original gable-front section. The northwest addition has been constructed and demolished several times over the life of the house. The dwelling's overall dimensions are approximately 32' 6" width and 49' in length. It has a stone masonry foundation on the street-facing elevations and a rubble foundation on the other elevations. All exterior walls are clad with wood beveled siding, and all roofs are clad in ridged metal sheeting. The building has partial basement that is unfinished.

Summary Statement of Significance:

The Fox-Worswick House is eligible for the National Register of Historic Places at the local level under Criterion A, for its significance in the areas of Exploration and Settlement. The property is associated with the establishment and development of the community of Hailey in Central Idaho. Its history exemplifies early settlement and development patterns in Hailey during the mining "boom and bust" period of 1880-1890s. Several of the larger houses built in Hailey's residential area during this time are no longer extant. Others have been extensively remodeled. The Fox-Worswick property's changing ownership also reflected the types and backgrounds of entrepreneurs involved in the settlement and development of Hailey, as well as those involved in its later boom-and-bust cycles. The present owners have carefully restored its front façade to match its original character at the turn of the 20th century.

Narrative Description

(Describe the historic and current physical appearance of the property. Explain contributing and noncontributing resources if necessary. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, setting, size, and significant features.)

Summary Paragraph

The Fox-Worswick house is located on slightly sloping ground at the northwest corner of North Second Avenue and East Bullion Street. It is on a large lot landscaped with trees and shrubs, with no fence enclosing the property. A single-car garage is the only other structure on the property; it is located north of the house. The dwelling is a two-story building based on the gable-front and wing plan, with modest Queen Anne-influenced ornamentation. The additions and second story of the gable-front section were built around an original one-story, cottonwood log cabin core. The building has a massed compound plan, with a T-shaped wing centered on its west elevation, a one-story, shed-roofed addition on its northwest corner, and a matching two-story addition to the north elevation of the original gable-front section. The northwest addition has been constructed and demolished several times over the life of the house. The dwelling's overall dimensions are approximately 32' 6" width and 49' in length. It has a stone masonry foundation on the street-facing elevations and a rubble foundation on the other elevations. All exterior walls are clad with wood beveled siding, and all roofs are clad in ridged metal sheeting. The building has partial basement that is unfinished.

Narrative Description

A one-story, hipped-roof front porch extends across the first story of the dwelling's south elevation, which faces Bullion Street. The porch has spindlework rail and porch supports with lace-like brackets. A small, pediment-like extension tops the porch roof over the entryway to the original cabin portion of dwelling. Most of the windows on the house are double-hung, wood sash with 2-over-2 lights; several on the south and north gable ends are paired windows divided with simple wood mullions. Other windows include for one fixed window near the stairwell on the west elevation and three 6-over-6 wood sash windows in the one-story, northwest addition.

A one-car garage is also located near the northeast corner of the property. It is a one-story, wood frame building with a concrete foundation and a steeply pitched gable roof clad with metal. Its dimensions are approximately 12' in width and 18' 4" in length. The walls are clad with narrow beveled wood siding, with fancy-cut wood shingles between eaves on the east gable end. The east gable end includes an entryway of double wood brace-and-frame doors that swing open from the center. The west gable end has a single wood panel door for an entry and no fancy-cut shingles in its eaves. Centered on the south elevation is a wood-frame, double-hung sash window with 1-over-1 lights. An attached wood shed with rough-sawn vertical board siding and a metal-clad shed roof is located on the garage's north façade. Its dimensions are 10' in width and 16' 9" in length.

As is the case with most historic buildings in early mining towns, there have been several alterations to the house over the years. Originally built as a one-story log cabin in 1881, a one-story T-shaped wing and front porches were added to the house by 1885. The 1888 Sanborn map shows two one-room additions to the residence's north elevations (on both the original section and wing). By 1890, the Sanborn map indicates that the north addition to the wing section had been considerably enlarged, and a second story had been added to the original gable front and wing sections. In 1907, a one-story, rectangular room had been added to the northeast corner of the original gable-front section and wing. A second enclosed entry was added to the southwest corner of the original section and wing, creating two entries on the south elevation. The house remained in this configuration until at least 1910. Sometime between 1910 and 1920, the large addition in the northeast corner of the house was torn down. In 1938, a one-story addition was rebuilt in that location. After 1943, the one-story northeastern addition was enlarged and extended to be flush with the east elevation. Other alterations after 1943 included replacing the original doorway into the log portion with a picture window and covering the windows that originally flanked the door, and cladding all exterior walls with composition siding.

Some of the ornamental details on the south elevation were changed over time. Sometime between 1910 and 1938, the spindlework porch was removed and replaced with Craftsman-style materials. The porch supports were battered wood piers and the railing was enclosed with wood bevel siding. The wood piers and enclosed railing were removed and replaced with metal porch supports after 1943.

It is difficult to assess how the house's interior changed over time, other than the additions. The original stairway to the second story remains intact. The walls of the log cabin core remain intact, except for a large entryway cut into its west wall sometime before 2000. The second story rooms on the south end of the house retain their original dimensions and entryways. The door to the room at the top of stairs includes its original transom.

The house underwent a major restoration after 2000. Based on historic materials left in the basement and attic at that time and a 1906 photo of the house, the original wood bevel siding and spindlework porch were restored on the south (street-facing) elevation. The original door to the entryway into the cabin core was put back into place, and the flanking windows uncovered. All original windows that were left intact were restored. The large shed-roofed addition on the northwest corner was rebuilt and clad with matching wood bevel siding. The addition's original 6-over-6 double-hung sash windows had been replaced with aluminum windows with a hopper section sometime after 1943; these were removed and replaced with wood frame, 6-over-6 double-hung sash windows that were slightly larger than the original windows in the addition. A small fixed window was added to the western elevation at the bottom of the original stairs leading to the second story.

A two-story, gable-roofed addition replaced the one-story shed-roofed addition on the north elevation of the house's gable-front section. An entryway on the first floor and five matching double-hung, wood sash windows of 2-over-2 lights were placed in the addition's east elevation. On the addition's north elevation, a wood panel door and one double-hung, wood sash windows of 2-over-2 lights are located in its first story. Paired windows are centered in the second story. These windows match the original paired windows on the south elevation of the gable-front section.

The garage retains its historic integrity, except for a change to the double-door entryway. Originally, the doors were sliding ones that hung from a rod above the entry. In 2001, these doors were changed to hinged double doors that swing outward. Sometime after 1943 and before 2001, a portion of the original woodshed (which was originally located between the dwelling and the garage) was moved and added to the garage's north elevation.

Narrative Statement of Significance (provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance)

Developmental history/additional historic context information (if appropriate)

Opposition from Native American tribes slowed mineral exploration and settlement of Central Idaho until after the 1878 Bannock Indian War. After the U.S. Army removed native tribes from the area, a resurgence of gold mining occurred there. Lack of refining technologies for lead and silver impeded further mining development in the Wood River region, with the closest smelters located near Salt Lake in Utah Territory. The construction of the Utah Northern Railroad from Ogden through Blackfoot in 1879 helped Wood River miners gain access to these smelters and allowed for slightly easier transportation of supplies. Lead and silver recovery operations boomed in the Wood River Valley during the 1880s. From September to late November 1880, the number of mining claims in the area rose from 233 to over 2,000. This boom continued through the 1890s, aided by the construction of local smelters and the development of a railroad lines throughout southern Idaho.¹

Until the railroad lines were completed, several stage and express companies served the isolated mining camps in central Idaho. One was the Utah, Idaho, and Oregon Stage Company, which was a branch of the stage line that ran from Kelton, Utah, to The Dalles, Oregon. The Wood River branch was formed in April 1881, with John Hailey as its superintendent. Hailey had helped move army troops during the Bannock War, and had already claimed land east of the Wood River in 1880. Following the resurgence of mining in the area, he and three other partners—Eben S. Chase, William T. Riley, and A. H. Boomer—turned their Desert Land Entry claims into the platted townsite of Hailey in December 1880.²

The 1881 plat of the Hailey townsite was slightly skewed to fit the valley floor, which lay southeast to northwest. The townsite included 340 acres bounded by River Street (though not yet platted), Galena Street, Maple Street, and what would later be Fifth Avenue and the railroad tracks. Within the boundaries lay 72 blocks, averaging 20-

24 lots each. An alleyway bisected most of the blocks. The lots were long and narrow, with the commercial ones measuring 30 feet by 120 feet, and the residential ones measuring 20 feet by 120 feet. The residential lots had building setbacks from the street of 25 feet. The number of residential lots owned by one person varied greatly, from one to five lots some instances.³

By April 1881, twenty buildings were under construction, and lots were selling from 25 to 200 dollars. Businesses started to line Main Street, including one drug store, two hardware stores, four general merchandising operations, one clothing store, two saloons, and one restaurant. The boom continued; a May 7 article in the Idaho Tri-Weekly Statesman described seventy-five structures being erected, with an average of ten lots sold a day for 100 to 400 dollars apiece. It also reported that the corner lots on Main and Bullion Street went for higher prices, some as much as $1,000. Buildings now stretched along both sides of Main Street for 2,000 feet.⁴

In April John Hailey sold 86 town lots, including several to Charles B. Fox, a native of New York and a Civil war veteran. Fox's wife, Genevieve, had their first child in Utah in March 1881; by April, Charles had opened a dry goods business on the east side of Hailey's Main Street, between Croy and Bullion streets. Fox acted as agent for the Blackfoot, Bonanza, and Wood River Stage Company and the Pacific Express Company (a competitor to Wells Fargo). He also opened a branch store in the mining camp of Bullion, located west of Hailey. By September 1881, there were at least seven businesses in Hailey offering similar wares--groceries and mining supplies. Some of the newcomers had come from merchandising operations in Utah. Simon J. Friedman, born in Germany, previously ran a store in the mining town of Silver Reef, located in southern Utah. John C. Fox, a Pennsylvania native, was a dry goods clerk in Salt Lake City. William T. Riley, formerly of Kelton, also opened a new store on Main Street in 1881. He had previously partnered with J. J. Tracy in a drug store at Bellevue. These businessmen purchased residential lots located east of Main Street.⁵

Mining and commercial demands for pine lumber made it a precious commodity; many buildings were constructed with hewn logs from cottonwood trees that lined the Wood River's banks. Other businesses were simply one-story tents. Many of the earliest dwellings in the residential area were one-room structures built out of cottonwood logs. One was the home of Simon Moses Friedman, a cousin and business partner of S. J. Friedman, and the other was Charles B. Fox's family dwelling.⁶

Charles Fox's dry goods store soon had many local competitors. By September 1881, there were at least seven businesses in Hailey offering similar wares--groceries and mining supplies. Fox's biggest--and most long-lived--competitor was S. J. Friedman, who had previous merchandising experience in Salt Lake City and Ogden. By 1882, Friedman and his family members had built two substantial brick buildings on Hailey's Main Street. Charles Fox was not as successful in his endeavor, and lost his business to a sheriff's sale in October 1881.⁷

After losing his business, Fox briefly served as a deputy sheriff. By December 1881, he was hired by the county to abstract and remove records from Rocky Bar (the former Alturas County seat) to Hailey (the newly elected Blaine County seat). Fox and Charles H. Jones stayed in Rocky Bar until May 1882, then immediately set up a real estate business in Hailey. Their new business advertised "...complete abstracts of records of Alturas County, conveyancing a Specialty." In essence, it was the first title company in the county. Jones only stayed in business with Fox for two months; by October 1882, Fox was running for the office of Blaine County Auditor and Recorder. Fox won the election, despite accusations by the Hailey newspaper editor that he abused his status as a Free Mason to win votes and rigged some of the ballots. Sometime between 1882 and 1885, the Fox family added another lot to their property and had constructed a one-story, wood-frame addition and front porches to their Hailey dwelling.⁸

By 1882, John Hailey and his business partners sold most of the Hailey townsite to the Idaho-Oregon Land Improvement Company (IOLIC), a subsidiary of the Union Pacific Railroad. After the Hailey Town Company sold the remaining lots to the IOLIC, Hailey was expanded to include 140 blocks. Robert E. Strahorn, publicist for both the Union Pacific and the Oregon Short Line Railroad, served as vice-president of the IOLIC. The Oregon Short Line (OSL, which later became part of Union Pacific Railroad) laid its tracks across southern Idaho from 1881 to 1883, with a branch line built from Shoshone to Hailey in 1883.⁹

During this "boom" period in Hailey, several larger frame structures had replaced or expanded the initial one-room log cabins built by its earliest residents. The most successful businessmen and merchants built one and one-half and two-story houses on corner lots north and east of Main Street. These lots were located between Pine and Spruce streets, and by 1883 bounded by the railroad tracks to the northeast. Two of the earliest homes belonged to former Hailey Townsite Company members Eben S. Chase and William T. Riley. They built two-story wood frame houses near the same intersection as the Charles Fox home--The corners of Second Avenue and East Bullion Street. The house plans were based on the vernacular Gable-and-Wing form and had simple trim, because any milled woodwork had to come by wagon from Boise (Chase did later import some milled porch posts from Boise). On the southwest corner of these streets, The Episcopal Church (the oldest church in town) was constructed. In the early 1880s, two other two-story houses were built on corner lots in this area. The John C. Fox's (no relation to Charles Fox) house stood at the corner of Third Avenue South and East Bullion Street, and Simon J. Friedman's dwelling was located at 123 Second Avenue North. Both were ornate, Queen Anne-style houses, reflecting the success of these dry-goods merchants.¹⁰

The lots on the south and west side of Main Street, especially those located on River Street, had some larger homes built there by 1881. Most of them were initially used as houses of prostitution. "Chinatown" was located even further southwest along the River. Thirty years later, River Street became the location of Basque boarding houses and residences.¹¹

Genevieve Fox, wife of Charles B. Fox, sold their modest house in Hailey more affluent neighborhood by 1885. She was able to keep the property despite her husband's business losses and lawsuit settlements. This may have been because John Hailey, as part of his final townsite entry proof, had deeded the property to Genevieve in 1884. By October of 1885, she and the Fox children moved back to her hometown of Washington, D. C., while Charles traveled south to the Snake River "to oversee some of his mining claims." That month their Hailey residence was purchased by Dr. Newell J. and Celia Brown for $1,500.¹²

Newell J. Brown, a Canadian native, served as a surgeon for the Union Pacific and Oregon Short Line railroad companies. He followed the construction of the OSL's Wood River branch line into Hailey in 1883. Brown had made several mining and real estate investments in the area. Brown also partnered with Don McKay to buy the Miner's Hospital (later called Alturas County Hospital) near "Smith's Hot Springs" (formerly Croy's Hot Springs, later renamed Hailey Hot Springs). The hot springs were located in the middle of the Mineral Hill Mining District, and the hospital was constructed on the springs' west side in 1881. Local miners initially paid a one-dollar subscription fee per year in order to avail themselves of the hospital's services. The frame building also had a wing devoted to the care of local indigents, whose bills were paid by the county. Brown was the second physician hired to serve the hospital. He later invested in the development of the Hailey Hot Springs Hotel and resort with members of the Robert Strahorn family in the late 1880s to early 1890s. Hailey's population continued to grow, reaching approximately 1,300 by 1890.¹³

Between the years 1885 and 1890, the Brown family made further additions to their Hailey residence. The additions turned the modest Fox home into a more prominent dwelling that matched its streetcorner neighbors, the Riley and former Chase dwellings. Two one-story additions were constructed on the north ends of the original dwelling and first addition by 1888, and a second story was added to the original section and first addition by 1890. In Brown's biographical sketch included in Lewis Publishing Company's History of Idaho book (published 1899), his house was described as "a commodious, well appointed and altogether delightful home, in which a generous hospitality is dispensed."¹⁴

During the 1890s, many Wood River residents, including the Brown family, would suffer financial losses caused by national and local events. As early as 1888, world market prices for silver began dropping, and many western mining investors incurred considerable debt. Local smelters closed and the cost of shipping ore from the Wood River mines became prohibitive, causing many to cease operation. Mine workers and suppliers began leaving the smaller camps and towns, decreasing the population that local professionals such as Dr. Brown served. Hailey's population remained stable at 1,500 people, but the mining hamlets of Bullion, Doniphan, and Broadford became ghost towns. In 1896, the miner's hospital near the Hailey Hot Springs burned down, and the adjacent hotel and resort was razed by fire three years later. As was the case with former house owner Charles Fox, Newell Brown threw his hat into the county political ring. He ran for the office of county coroner in 1900, but was defeated in the November elections. A month later, the Browns sold their home to John Baugh, a local druggist and real estate investor, for $1,500 and moved to California.¹⁵

A brief revival in Wood River mining activity occurred in the early 1900s, and Hailey's population grew to 2,000 people. The former Brown property underwent further changes during this time. John Baugh took out an $800 real estate mortgage from Peter Snider, a mining engineer and banker who lived in the former Chase house, located directly across the street on East Second Avenue. Two years later, Baugh sold the former Brown property to

Lottie A. and William L. Mercer for $2,500. Mercer, a physician, had recently moved to Hailey, but he and his wife did not stay there long. They sold the property in 1904 to Earnest A. Worswick, a miner from Bellevue, for $2,600. Worswick also took out several real estate mortgages on the property during his six-year ownership. By 1909, the local mining boom had already tapered off. Earnest Worswick moved on to Nevada's Humboldt Mining District before selling his residence to Dr. John J. Raaf in 1910.16

John J. Raaf was an Indiana native who came to Hailey, Idaho by 1905. There he worked as a physician, and went through extensive litigation to prove his credentials to practice medicine. His wife, Madge, his son (John E.) and he stayed in Hailey until they moved to Pocatello in 1919. Their Hailey residence was sold in October 1919 to Frank Campbell, a longtime farmer and lead miner in Broadford. Campbell died in 1920, and his wife Sarah inherited the property. As mining prices remained stagnant from World War I to 1927, Hailey's population stayed at 1,500 in the 1920s. By 1930, Sarah Campbell had moved to California to live with her daughter, Mabel Comstock. Sarah deeded the Hailey property to her three daughters: Mabel, Jessie [Aukema] Andrews, and Mary Moore.17

After the nearby Triumph Mine reopened in 1927, the town of Hailey experienced a small economic recovery. More people came to live and work in the area, including the family of George W. Scott. They moved to Hailey in 1938 so that George could work with his uncle at the Triumph mine. Because of the local housing shortage and for extra family income, they rented out rooms in the home. The Scotts left Hailey in 1943 and sold the house to R. Hunter and Zeo Nelson. Hunter Nelson was a ranger for the Sawtooth National Forest, whose administrative offices were initially located in Hailey from 1933 to 1953. Nelson also worked part-time as a private outfitter and guide.18

From the 1940s to the 1970s, Hailey's population stalled at approximately 1,500 people, as other areas in Blaine County thrived because of the expanding tourism industry. Ketchum, because of its geographical location near the ski resort of Sun Valley (begun in 1936), became the focal point for population growth and new construction. Nearby Hailey was slow to develop until the 1980s and 1990s. In ten years, its population grew from approximately 2,100 to over 3,600. A major boom occurred from 1990 to 2000, as Hailey's population doubled to 6,200 people. During this time, several of Hailey's historic buildings were extensively remodeled or torn down. Two of the area's most majestic dwellings, the John C. Fox and William T. Riley homes, had already been razed by fires in the 1920s and the 1940s.19

Hunter Nelson owned the former Fox-Worswick property until his death in 1999. His estate sold it to the Wood River Land Trust in 2000. The house's exterior had undergone two major remodeling jobs in the 1930s and the 1960s, greatly altering its appearance. Throughout 2001, the staff of the Wood River Land Trust and K&M Construction Company restored the house to its appearance in a 1906 historical photograph. The house's façade was renovated to match its historic exterior from circa 1900 to 1920. The property has retained the original lots platted by John Hailey 1881.20

The history of the Fox-Worswick house, including the changes made to it, exemplifies early settlement and development patterns in Hailey during the earliest mining "boom and bust" period of 1880-1890s. Several of the larger houses built in the neighborhood during this period, such as the W. T. Riley House and the John C. Fox House, are no longer extant. Others have been extensively remodeled. This dwelling and the Eben S. Chase and Simon M. Friedman houses are the most intact examples of more affluent residents of 1880's Hailey. The Fox-Worswick property's changing ownership also reflected the types and backgrounds of entrepreneurs involved in the early settlement and development of Hailey, as well as during its later-boom-and-bust cycles. The present owners have carefully restored its front façade to match its original character at the turn of the 20th century. Therefore, it is eligible on the local level to the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion A.
