BACKGROUND/SUMMARY OF ALTERNATIVES CONSIDERED:

Amendment Summary

Building Permit Term of Validity (15.08.020 B)
- Limit the maximum number of building permit extensions to 4. This would allow 3.5 years for a project to be completed.

Background
Currently, there is no limit to the number of times a building permit can be extended. There are dozens of ongoing projects on record that began construction in past years and have yet to be completed. In at least two cases, permits that were filed prior to 2004 are still active and ongoing building projects. This has led to a confusing array questions on applicability of the current building code to a project that was permitted under an outdated code. For example, a project permitted in 2004 would have been required to meet 2000 or 2003 building codes. The current 2009 building codes have different requirements and safety measures that were not implement in the earlier codes.

To resolve this issue, staff met with a large developer with several ongoing building permits that have been extended since 2006. At the meeting, staff and the developer agreed that a maximum of four extensions would be adequate time to complete a project under any circumstance. Given our current code, this would mean a project would have a maximum of 1,268 days, or 3.5 years, from the issuance of a building permit to project completion. After that point, the builder would be required to submit a new building permit with new fees.
