1. New Business

- The Commission heard a presentation by Bob Wiederrick, a local artist who introduced a project of his to the Commission to see if they had an interest in it. The project is a custom natural rust heart of Idaho sculpture. The Commission will keep this in mind when considering projects in the future.
- Discussion on Hop Porter Park Narrative; Davis introduced background for the park narrative explaining that the proposed new signage will be an informative display to read as a timeline of the park's history as well as the donor information. She asked the Commission to include any historic timelines or information that they may have in the narrative for the Park Board and City to consider moving forward with this project. Davis explained that this project is also part of a larger city effort to update the signage in City parks.
- Discussion on updating the phone booth project and the report submitted by Great Solar Works; Davis explained to the Commission that the biggest obstacle is the location of the phone booths as they are shaded by large trees and are not producing enough sun to power the units. She also explained that the horizontal installation of the units causes them to collect snow and dirt which also hinders their effectiveness. The size of the current batteries could also play a part in the units not working as efficiently as they could and she suggested possibly looking into a larger battery for them. Davis said that another option would be to investigate the location to see if there is an existing power source. The Commission unanimously decided the priority was to check with Public Works regarding a power source for the booths. The second option will be to investigate purchasing more powerful batteries for both units. Staff will look into the option to provide power to the units with the Streets Department. If that does not work out, staff will look into new battery sources and bring their findings to the next meeting.

- The Commission discussed project priorities for their remaining 2025 budget and agreed that completing the phone booth project is still the top priority, which depending on the route taken could use the remaining budget. The Commission discussed other project priorities and possible new projects to include:
 - Project Plaques
 - Verify projects to include Plaques, Verify the Plaque wording, design etc.
 - Schedule a spring tour of the public art pieces including plaques to complete/review updated- The Commission set the date for May 28, 2025, at 9am.
